

Dallas Unveils CityLINK CD Rom

New Business Tool has everything a vendor needs to “do business with the city”

Companies looking to do business with the City of Dallas now have another tool, CityLINK. CityLINK is a business card-sized CD Rom containing everything needed for working with the City of Dallas. The new card contains forms, step-by-step instructions for bid submission, bid drop box locations, certification information, the city’s Good Faith Effort Plan, links to online vendor registration and more. The card was introduced during a reception hosted by Dallas City Manager Ted Benavides and members of the Dallas City Council.

First Assistant City Manager Mary Suhm said CityLINK is not only convenient for businesses, but it’s also good for customer service. “CityLINK will help increase accessibility to City Hall while reducing the confusion that can sometimes come from dealing with a lot of different people across departments. With CityLINK, vendors know they have one group of people they can call, the RESOURCE LINK TEAM.” The RESOURCE LINK TEAM is the city’s group of business development and procurement specialists. They can help vendors with everything from registering to become a vendor, to identifying alternate sources of funding.
